Secretary Laird:

'Draft Has Ended'

On January 27, the then Secretary of Defense, Melvin R. Laird, dispatched the following message to the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Assistant Secretaries of Defense, the heads of Defense agencies and the unified and specified commands:

"With the signing of the peace agreement in Paris today, and after receiving a report from the Secretary of the Army that he foresees no need for further inductions, I wish to inform you that the Armed Forces henceforth will depend exclusively on volunteer soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines. Use of the draft has ended.

"This means that we have beaten President Nixon's objective of zero draft calls by five months.

"I know that each of you will continue to do whatever is appropriate to support legislation to insure approval of additional incentives for our men and women as proposed in the Special Pay Incentives legislation. I am particularly concerned that without such legislation, it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to maintain the National Guard and Reserve at levels mandated by the Congress and as required by our Total Force Concept.

"I am confident that the Congress will continue to support those programs necessary to allow us to continue the zero-draft status we assume today.

"I am particularly hopeful that the Senate will promptly follow the lead of the House and enact the legislation giving added incentives for service from members of the health professions, so that the requirements for health services personnel can also be put on a volunteer basis.

"I want to congratulate you and your organizations for the magnificent work which has been done during the past four years in moving us from an armed force which was drafting 300,000 men a year to my decision today that use of the draft for our soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines is finished, and that the all-volunteer era—which our Commander-in-Chief, President Nixon, has promised the American people—is upon us."
